given by Dr. Edward Everett Hale on the eighty-fifth auniversary of his birth:

"Probably of more importance in the make-up of my life afterward was my good fortune that I was cradled in the sheets of a newspaper. My father, who was the proprietor and editor of the Boston Daily Advertiser for half a century, conducted through much of that time the largest printing house in Boston. In the office, therefore, I was able before I was twelve years old to learn how to set type, how to make up a form, and how to work the hand press of that day. I am rather proud now to say that I could earn my living as a journeyman in some country office where they have not yet introduced the modern improvements."

"I advise all young men to do what I was forced to do in those days of trial and to acquaint themselves as largely as they can with the condition of every part of the country. I have always attempted to keep up my correspondence and friendship with the Pacific Coast and with the great interior States, as with the realon of the Atlantic in which I was born. This is more and more easy to do every day now, when York and Alaska is no longer an unknown region."
